CAPITAL ONE /JUNIOR ACHIEVEMENT FINANCE PARK™ FINDS A NEW HOME AT THE MUSEUM OF AMERICAN FINANCE

NYC Students Spend a Day on Wall Street to Buy into the Economic Necessity of Personal Financial Management Skills

December 7, 2010 - NEW YORK, NY: Wall Street - the financial capital of the world - is where the rubber meets the road in terms of money management expertise. This holiday season - when the thought of buying budget busting items is top of mind for most folks, more than 2,000 NYC public school students will spend a day on Wall Street at the inaugural installation of the Capital One/Junior Achievement Finance Park™ program at the Museum of American Finance's Center for Financial Education. Finance Park is an economic reality "wake-up call" for teens. Students experience, and are challenged by, simulated real-life budgetary decisions that adults typically make. And their take-away? That budgeting, money management and life skills are necessary for a successful and financially stable future. Capital One/JA Finance Park™ at the Museum for American Finance is scheduled to run December 13, 2010 through February 11, 2011.

Capital One/JA Finance Park™, a unique, award-winning program for middle and high school students, begins with four weeks of intensive in-classroom, financial education lessons developed by Junior Achievement. Students then have the opportunity to put their newly-acquired money management knowledge to the test in a high-tech learning lab, designed to replicate the community of a small city. In this innovative learning environment, students are assigned fictional jobs, incomes, families and expenses, and are tasked with developing and managing their household budgets.

"There couldn't be a better place for students to receive much needed lessons in money management, budgeting and life skills," said Joseph Peri, president of JA New York "The location at the Museum of American Finance will give them an opportunity to explore and tap into the local, national and global economic pulse that drives and impacts business, commerce, spending and saving decisions in their households and communities."

Classroom lessons are driven home by the experience of making real-life financial decisions about housing, furnishings, investments, food, entertainment, phone, cable, savings and charitable contributions; decisions they will ultimately make upon entering adulthood. Deciding wants vs. needs becomes a sobering and critical economic life lesson.

Capital One believes that financial literacy and money-management skills are crucial building blocks for economic success. Especially in today's economic environment, the ability to make wise financial decisions is critical,” said James Covington, Manhattan Market President for Capital One Bank. “Capital One/Junior Achievement Finance Park™ has a proven track record in engaging students in financial-education learning that is both substantive and fun.”

David Cowen, President and CEO of the Museum of American Finance, said the Museum is proud to host Capital One /JA Finance Park™.

“Junior Achievement’s economic education programs and experiences are world-class, and Capital One shares our vision of improving the lives of students through financial education,” said Cowen. “From our perspective this is a perfect match.”

Capital One/JA Finance Park was awarded the Corporate Citizenship Award by the US Chamber of Commerce in 2006. Since launching three years ago in the NYC & Long Island market, Finance Park has delivered vital financial education to over 9,000 middle and high school students. The program will be hosted at the Museum of American Finance located at 48 Wall Street, NYC, beginning December 13, 2010 through to February 11, 2011. Finance Park is not open to the public. School/student participation is by invitation only. For more information about Junior Achievement programs and experiences, visit: www.jany.org or connect with us on Facebook or Twitter.
